

the women who hate

ME.

POETRY 1980-1990

DOROTHY ALLISON

Copyright © 1991 by Dorothy Allison All rights reserved.

This book may not be reproduced, in whole or in part, except in the case of reviews, without permission from Firebrand Books, 141 The Commons, Ithaca, New York 14850.

The original version of The Women Who Hate Me was published in 1983 by Long Haul Press.

Book and cover design by Betsy Bayley Typesetting by Bets Ltd.

Printed in the United States on acid-free paper by McNaughton & Gunn Library of Congress Card No. 91-311

acknowledgments

Janis Kelly, Nancy Bereano, Joy Johannessen, and Alix Layman gave me time with my mother before she died. For both of us—mama and me—no other gift was ever so important.

for mama

contents

dumpling girl/9
upcountry/10
mattie lee gibson/19
the women who hate me/21 silence grew between us/32 to the bone/33
liar/34
tomato song/36
hollow-cheeked/38
when i drink i become the joy of faggots/39
not speaking/screaming/42 butter my tongue/43
we all nourish truth with our tongues/45
the terror of my enemies/48
a woman like an ocean/49 appetite/51
she plays it tight/52
what is the dream of flesh?/53 boston, massachusetts/55
little enough/58
all those imaginary ladies/60
whoring away my imagination/62
i chose this ground/63
reason enough to love you/65
the women who love me/66
we make love/67
the other side of the wall/68

dumpling child

A southern dumpling child biscuit eater, tea sipper okra slicer, gravy dipper, I fry my potatoes with onions stew my greens with pork

And ride my lover high up on the butterfat shine of her thighs where her belly arches and sweetly tastes of rock salt on watermelon sunshine sharp teeth bite light and lick slow like mama's favorite dumpling child.

upcountry

1.

The summer you were seven and I was nine, I knew it all the light in your eyes the darkness in mine little sister, did I tell you then what I never said after how much I loved you how certain I was it wouldn't help?

The fire you set that I lied about the glass I broke, you pressed to your mouth, that red brick porch and slanting yard a dirt stretch of dead grass and abandoned cars the country of all my dreams, night terrors where your eyes were always growing dull and someone was always screaming the country where we knew ourselves despised.

When the uncles came to visit pickups parked aslant the yard bottles that rocked from board to rim shotguns point-down beside the gears a leather holster or canvas sling I watched the neighbors squint their eyes no-count, low down, disgusting, I put my nails to the bones of my neck squeezed, trying to understand.

You don't know where she's been.
I know where I've been.

2.

Upcountry, a woman lived in the crack of two mountains your daddy's mama growing tomato, okra, beans a house with two rooms, a central hall, a porch where the boards bred crickets.

Oh, to run away for that creek, the sun, her eyes, to carry water up from that spring, work her garden die at eleven, lockjaw taken from a nail on that porch.

Your daddy's mama, I wanted her for mine the way she sometimes looked at you seeing her son in the set of your shoulders nothing of me bitchwhelp, mama's older daughter mouth like a knifeblade, cut deep, angry eyes like the glint on a shotgun sight dark enough to prove the old tale true Bastard
marked by the spit of the devil.

Upcountry
I wanted to go upcountry trade you for your grandmother trade for that porch, silence the mountain, the weed-dye blankets as far from the low country as sin from saintly.
I could be saintly easy enough.

You always said women don't make babies with women.

3.

It's old terribly old this grief between us speaks another language metal crisp against the teeth coins that crack the molars spit blood, bone, and memory.

Do you remember the screaming?
The bushes where you hid our stepfather running after us caught me more often than you ran blood down my body?

Do you remember that porch?
How I fell back onto the corner cut deep between my legs screamed for mama driving up catching my scream in the pit of her fear my blood in her hands my hands between my legs the scream dying in my throat strangling on the certainty I would die.

Bleeding across the car seat mutely pushing at the blood I knew it would ruin the seatcover mama's uniform, your white curls.
I knew they'd have to cut away, throw out the seatcover, your hair, my body.

Maybe it was not then I learned to hate doctors might have been sooner but the way they laughed was enough the jokes I wasn't supposed to understand.

Eight years old, and fucking a post—hard up for it, can't you imagine?

I imagined my body widened into a mountain creek flooded the countryside with my dying.
I did not want to wake to pain sweat burning the stitches between one leg pinned, the other leg wide.

When you came in your hair cut short I screamed, hoarse as a crow YOU, YOU, YOU, YOU how I loved you.

Mad months lying pinned and silent tears and sweat running my open mouth, my cheek, your hand lifting the blanket to see what I couldn't.

Time made me walk like an old woman bent, stiff, tight with the laughter on the street the boys saying Let me. You won't even notice.
I'll use the hole you made.

4.

But it was you you who turned quick to fuck them quick to beg them to hold you closer make you safer ripen the valley between your legs and be just once soft and filling as buttermilk bubbles in a baby's mouth.

I shouted, called you whore but dreamed of your laughter justice ripening a baby at the back of my tongue.

Pink little sister, blue-eyed, stupid girl, family pet eyes of glass that nothing lived behind How I hated you, loved you, wanted you to melt into my bones pass to me the honey of how they looked at you.
Rot-sweet, dull-eyed sister took to fucking like I took to silence.

5.

Years later you gave me an envelope of dried blood, hair a memory of that house, that porch.
I gave you a knife, a handle I carved beanwire edging hammered nailheads that I meant to mean me and you.

I meant it to edge the memories never acknowledged dreams not shared, the metal keen coin-hammered, hard.
I meant it to make a piece of caring cut the lump of all we've swallowed the hatred we have resisted the love we pretend never made any difference.

mattie lee gibson

A cedar chest of lace and linen she would not wear underwear though she kept it in stacks we were not to touch.

The money my mama gave her for food went on silk, lace, thin satin briefs layered with vanilla in a deep old chest while she went naked under print dresses and we ate peaches four days out of five.

Her teeth were brown, heavy in her mouth.
I watched the rolls of muscle in her neck under her loose stained skin, those teeth, her twisted fingers, wide legs and the touch of brown on her lips, the thick wad of snuff rolling forward and back.

Okra, strawberries, sweet-eared white corn my sister five and I seven she sent us up the clay road blind side of the property with a brown paper sack.
I cut my knees on wire fences sister grew a terror of snakes while granny told mama we were so beautiful farmers paid us tribute on our walks.

Granny gathered blackberries, stripped muscadine vines stepped wide over ditches and peed straight down called me dark angel and sister mama's golden child while hinting at things mama wouldn't explain.
Her sons took to liquor, her daughters made babies.
Eleven children out of her body and only eight survived but never a baby blanket tainted the smell of cedar no hot cotton sun smell, no sweat, snuff, or piss.

How can you hate someone you love so?
Some old woman peeing in a ditch some old woman flesh of my flesh some old woman, rough, hard, dreaming linen pale as birch heart, satin pale as death.

I don't know who got it her cedar chest, her linen and vanilla, none of it worn, none of it stained.

Only know they sold it put her naked in that box walnut brass
a lining of much-desired silk.

the women who hate me

1.

The women who do not know me.

The women who, not knowing me, hate me mark my life, rise in my dreams and shake their loose hair throw out their thin wrists, narrow their already sharp eyes say Who do you think you are?

Lazy, useless, cuntsucking, scared, stupid What you scared of anyway?
Their eyes, their hands, their voices.
Terrifying.

The women who hate me cut me as men can't. Men don't count.
I can handle men. Never expected better of any man anyway.

But the women, shallow-cheeked young girls the world was made for safe little girls who think nothing of bravado who never got over by playing it tough.

What do they know of my fear?

What do they know of the women in my body?
My weakening hips, sharp good teeth, angry nightmares, scarred cheeks, fat thighs, fat everything.

*Don't smile too wide. You look like a fool.
Don't want too much. You an't gonna get it.*

An't gonna get it.
Goddamn.

Say goddamn and kick somebody's ass that I am not even half what I should be, full of terrified angry bravado.

BRAVADO.
The women who hate me
don't know can't imagine life-saving, precious bravado.

2.

God on their right shoulder righteousness on their left, the women who hate me never use words like hate speak instead of nature of the spirit not housed in the flesh as if my body, a temple of sin, didn't mirror their own.

Their measured careful words echo earlier coarser stuff say

*What do you think you're doing?
Who do you think you are?*

Whitetrash

no-count

bastard

mean-eyed garbage-mouth

cuntsucker

cuntsucker

no good to anybody, never did diddlyshit anyway.

You figured out yet who you an't gonna be?

The women who hate me hate
their insistent desires, their fat lusts swallowed and hidden, disciplined to nothing narrowed to bone and dry hot dreams.
The women who hate me deny hunger and appetite,
the cream delight
of a scream
that arches the thighs and fills the mouth with singing.

3.

Something hides here
a secret thing shameful and complicated.
Something hides in a tight mouth a life too easily rendered a childhood of inappropriate longing a girl's desire to grow into a man a boyish desire to stretch and sweat.

Every three years I discover again that no, I knew nothing before.
Everything must be dragged out, looked over again. The unexamined life is the lie, but still must I every time deny everything I knew before?

4.

My older sister tells me flatly she don't care who I take to my bed what I do there. Tells me finally she sees no difference between her husbands, my lovers. Behind it all we are too much the same to deny.

My little sister thinks my older crazy thinks me sick more shameful to be queer than crazy as if her years hustling ass, her pitiful junky whiteboy saved through methadone and marriage, all that asslicking interspersed with asskicking, all those pragmatic family skills we share mean nothing measured against the little difference of who and what I am.

My little sister too is one of the women who hate me.

5.

I measure it differently, what's shared, what's denied, what no one wants recognized.

My first lover's skill at mystery, how one day she was there, the next gone; the woman with whom I lived for eight years but slept with less than one; the lover who tied me to the foot of her bed when I didn't really want that but didn't really know what else I could get.

What else can I get?
Must I rewrite my life edit it down to a parable where everything turns out for the best?

But then what would I do with the lovers too powerful to disappear the women too hard to melt to soft stuff?
Now that I know that soft stuff was never where I wanted to put my hand.

6.

The women who hate me
hate too my older sister with her many children, her weakness for good whiskey, country music, bad men.
She says the thing women's lib has given her is a sense she don't have to stay too long though she does still she does much too long.

7.

I am not so sure anymore of the difference.
I do not believe anymore in the natural superiority of the lesbian, the difference between my sisters and me.

Fact is, for all I tell my sisters I turned out terrific at it myself: sucking cunt, stroking ego, provoking, manipulating, comforting, keeping.
Plotting my life around mothering other women's desperation the way my sisters build their lives around their men.
Till I found myself sitting at the kitchen table shattered glass, blood in my lap and her the good one with her stern insistence just standing there wanting me to explain it to her save her from being alone with herself.

Or that other one another baby-butch wounded girl How can any of us forget how wounded any of us have to be to get that hard?
Never to forget that working class says nothing does not say who she was how she was fucking me helpless. Her hand on my arm raising lust to my throat that lust everyone says does not happen though it goes on happening all the time.

How can I speak of her, us together?
Her touch drawing heat from my crotch to my face her face, terrifying, wonderful.
Me saying, "Yeah, goddamn it, yeah, put it to me, ease me, fuck me, anything. . ." till the one thing I refused then back up against a wall her rage ugly in the muscles of her neck her fist swinging up to make a wind a wind blowing back to my mama's cheek past my stepfather's arm.

I ask myself over and over how I came to be standing in such a wind?
How I came to be held up like my mama with my jeans, my shoes locked in a drawer and the woman I loved breathing on me, "You bitch. You damned fool."

 "You want to try it?"
 "You want to walk to Brooklyn barefooted?"
 "You want to try it motherfucking?"

Which meant of course I had to decide how naked I was willing to go where.

Do I forget all that?
Deny all that?
Pretend I am not my mama's daughter
my sister's mirror?
Pretend I have not at least as much lust in my life as pain?

Where then will I find the country where women never wrong women where we will sit knee to knee finally listening to the whole naked truth of our lives?

silence grew between us

When you touched me my womb filled with light my mouth with light the deep places between my breasts flooded light full of the smell of baking eggplant, pure desire.

But the summer was a stone grinding in our mouths a rock between our legs blocking touch sensation or even the hope of consummation.

My fingers grew webs of iron my hands on your body felt numbed and cold. You shivered.
I sweated, cried, screamed.
We cried all summer.

"Hold me," I begged, but your fingers too were iron.
"Rock me," you pleaded, but my fingers would not move for the shame, the fear that stopped our hands our mouths.

Silence grew between us like a blackened stillborn egg still swelling.

to the bone

That summer I did not go crazy, spoke every day to my mama who insisted our people do not go crazy.

We make instead that sudden evening silence that follows the shotgun blast.

We stand up alone twenty years after like a scarecrow in a field pie-eyed, toothless, naming our enemies and outliving them.

That summer I talked to death like an old friend, a husky voice whispering up from my cunt, echoing around my knees, laughing.

That summer I did not go crazy but I wore

very close

very close

to the bone.

liar

I still cannot believe it how they lie, how they turn their eyes out to the light square forward set their mouths,
smile wet, shiny-toothed.
As calmly as speaking the truth they lie.

I pull papers out of my pockets.
"Here, you said it here. Look here." But the cameras are turning, six minutes gone, no more.
The reporters wrap it up and I am left with the papers the flat proof of a truth no one takes seriously.

I had not heard that truth had died bleeding from a thousand papercut silences strangled on the bones of a lie put out loud enough and long a lie that swelled meat on a diet of whispers a lie that grew wings brown and substantial as plainly made as dirt or cabbages trustworthy as syphilis or plague.

Oh liar!
Will you talk to me?
Will you sit at my table,
eat my gravy,
slide over and grin into my mouth the mouth I'll keep wide for you?

Oh liar,
Will you fuck me?
Will you slide your cabbage hands over my belly your dirty mouth up my thigh?

Oh liar, liar!
Is this how you did it?
Turned truth around and stuck her hard on the angle of your desire?

Did I mistake your sex, your intention?

No matter, liar, come on my tongue salt gush in my mouth. Sex an't the motive and I've a surprise for you.

Six minutes is more than enough.
Six minutes will root you deep where the heat, the razors wait.
No lights, no cameras, no audience to please just truth and me and patience.

I'm gonna harvest you a little at a time.

tomato song

I'm gonna give up my last name and maybe my first call myself Nite's daughter or Pusskicka or something really crude full of fucks and thrusting gestures.

I'm going to grow a rage like a tomato, kind of a great red fruit could wreck bridges or bring down sauce on half the city tell low-down jokes proposition old ladies lick their cheeks, offer to climb up under their skirts for free.

Might as well live up to my reputation.
Might as well play the movie out roll my tomato up Broadway knock people over from half a block further than Brooklyn, move to Canarsie,
buy a shotgun.

Throw parties? Hell,
I might as well throw parties.
Anybody here want to go to a party?
You're gonna have to dress for it might make a movie of it, put you all in the Tomato epic, premiere it on Times Square.

No apologies, explanations, excuses, nothing but me, my tomato, my rages, my name,
my name.

hollow-cheeked

I want to be a hollow-cheeked woman of mystery coming down the street in my black clothes and grey vest the outlaw lover long-haired lesbian mythical bitch.

Want them to tell my stories in Tallahassee
Amherst
Washington, D.C.
and
New York City.

Such a legend I would make lean, fast, and largely unknown but mysterious fascinating always provocative hollow-cheeked
which is the first problem.

Did you ever notice how the famous ones are always thin?

I could be thin.
I could be very good at leanness if you did not taste so good so good with chocolate, so good with gravy so filling, the legend, you, my appetite rich, delicious, mesmerizing like fine sherry with a sharp edge or attitude with tight pants.

when i drink i become the joy of faggots

When I drink I become the joy of faggots.

I try not to drink too often.
When I was younger I couldn't drink at all.

I have grown into this joy this sense that the night is full of possibilities conversation an art that can be perfected with gesture and ease and a glass in the hand.

When I was young I said I would be a writer with no sense what it could mean how hard it would be.
My friends talked sympathetically of another friend from Texas who had driven to Florida in an antique car who was known for how charmingly he could weep.

A Writer, a Poet, he would drink and talk to me of how all the men at school wanted to fuck him of his desire to leave them at the pavement edge knowing they would remember and want always his car his tears his ass his poems.

Sensitive,
everyone was sure he was sensitive.
He told me how when his roommate stood silent over his bed he reached up, slapped him, slapped him again.

He wanted me, you know.
I knew.

His roommate used to talk of how he resisted it, the desire, the burn for a beautiful boy.
A scholar of greek and latin and buggery when he drank he became foolish his moustache hanging damp.

I wanted him, you know.
I knew.

In the middle of the night I dream old friends and lechery.
Since I do not drink, I burn.
Is this what everybody knew that I didn't?
How desire and denial roll in the glass?
How the fire, the fire consumes?

She had hands with fingers like tapers lean legs, dark hair, a car.
Everywhere I saw that car just the briefest flash of her hair, legs, fingers and gone.
Sensitive,
God, she knew she was sensitive.
And when I stood over her she slapped me with the delight of a boy.

I wanted her, you know.
They knew.

Their poems were published everywhere.
I made a small fire of mine on the beach.

There is a small fire in a glass of whiskey a backfire that counters the fire inside like the fire in the eyes of an angry woman who suspects that inside her hides a faggot standing silent over someone's bed holding still for the blows the sensitive give.

not speaking/screaming

Silence is the problem, she said. She insisted.
I went for a walk in the grey morning up Seventh Avenue toward the park with the pigeons and the Boarshead delivery men.
On every block someone camped, some mottled grey face shivered settled in a bed of trash.

Have you noticed the sudden increase in shoeshine stands? I asked her.
She kept her hands in her pockets, her chin fierce. No.
I pulled my silence in around me, remembered years disappearing because I would not speak of them.
You're right, of course, I told her, gave in fell silent thinking still of that tall woman who walks Broadway with such long steps and screams
and screams.

butter my tongue

Butter, butter, butter my tongue.
I've lost my rhythm the pulse of my language feel ready to break feel ready to crumble feel ready to fall like a doll without knees.

I was meant for a gospel singer sipping whiskey or bourbon behind the stage going out to croon Sweet Jesus (breathe) Oh hold me up, Hold me up in the air.

I was meant for Moses and meat and sweet gospel juice in the seat, rising higher, higher.
I had lyric in my belly wind in my mouth, fear and desire rising higher, higher,
screaming low against the dark throwing-back rhythm from the windows of a '57 chevy the year I was eight before I lost rhythm, language, and soul curled down around my own tongue swallowed my people, my history and wrapped myself in a clipped language never rose to any height.

Butter, butter, butter my tongue and give me back all I have lost.

we all nourish truth with our tongues

1.

I am saying that the world is wider than anyone thought the women far more important their true voices, the real events of their lives not cleaned up not lied about stark dirty and hard.

We all nourish truth with our tongues not in sour-batter words that never take shape nor line-driven stories bent to skirt the edge of our great exhaustion, desire, and doubt.
We all use simply the words of our own lives to say what we really want to lie spent on our lovers put teeth to all we hate to strain the juice of our history between what has been allowed and what has always been denied, the active desire to take hold of the root.

The root is choice.

It will not grow in a box a barred room walled round by those who shout the same old words over and over.

I am saying that the root of fear is choice.

The root of all desire:
choice.

2.

In the dirt country where I was born the words that named me were so terrible no one would speak them so always just over my head a silent language damned me.

I learned then that what no one would say was the thing about which nothing could be done.

If they would not say Lesbian

I could not say pride.

If they would not say Queer

I could not say courage.

If they would not name me

Bastard, worthless, stupid, whore

I could not grab onto my own spoken language, my love for my kind, myself.

I learned there is only one language and it either speaks truly or lies.

But sometimes it must go on a long time before the whole truth comes out and until that moment all the words are lies. Still I tell you there is only one language.

What I am saying is the words are growing in my mouth.
All the names of god will be spoken, all the hidden secret things made known.
We will root in dirt our mothers watered sing songs, tell stories echoed in their mouths.

Then with no walls around us, you and I will speak of truth to each other, the soil that grows the vegetable as deeply as the flower that never touches the soil.

the terror of my enemies

The act of love as I dream it is distinct from the act my enemies imagine.
How can I display the tenderness with which we enfold
I and the army
I invite to my bed, the hard-hipped aching women I put my tongue,
my hands to,
the women whose hands widen and fill me, whose tongues suck salt to the surface of my skin.

The act of murder as I dream it is distinct from the terror of my enemies.
They cannot imagine the bone speed of my rage, the strawberry sweetness of my revenge measured cold and bitter sharp
behind my tongue, the regard of these slow eyes.

a woman like an ocean

All last spring I imagined falling in love with the ocean going down at midnight, dawn, sunset to kneel and worship a female movement slow jewel drops running forward and back.

In the city I have to take the D train out to Coney Island, Brighton Beach walk the rock slope, rotted boardwalk.
It is the same ocean, has to be, but not to be fallen in love with.

Greaseshine, weed-lined, trash high.
No one swims, no one my age.
Drunken boys throw each other forward come up glistening, cursing.
It has to be the same ocean.
Has to be, can't be cannot be loved like the other.

On Brant Beach I knew her a suburban ocean like a girl in a well-tailored suit.
Clean. Watched over. Protected.
Walking a line toward the horizon every day.
When after three weeks the storm came we went down to watch her roll over and scream.
Foam gathered grease layered yellow and cold.
Sunset brought in a dark wind.
A chill went up my back like lust.

I have never been able to resist her the muscles of a strong woman who laughs her hands rough as she rolls me over talks mean, drags me forward and back, when she fucks like an ocean, a bruiser makes shell-puckered hickey-bite marks, when she moves like she's breaking out thunder, when she rises like spray in the wind.
Singing roll over, roll over and ride me roll over, swim down, laugh out loud.

Those last days the ocean became her.
Roaring dark, strong, salt stinging like sweat called my name till my teeth ached, tongue trembled rolled foam heat right down to my knees.

appetite

It must sound better than it is the women who go to France for the summer a spiced croissant smeared with yellow butter cream in the coffee. I grow fat in Brooklyn.

In Brooklyn
another woman makes herself lean a season in the belly has turned and her lust is all pomegranate juice, shredded carrots, grapefruit shipped in from Florida.

From Florida
my mama writes that the custody fight goes well though she almost lost her job when the in-laws, lying, called her dirty, brought in the health inspector from the state.

The state
sits on my appetites, will not let any of us travel to France, or Florida easily.
The work goes on hungry or starving for hope—a pomegranate swollen red rage in my life.

she plays it tight

A woman I love really thinks she can make of herself a boy a lean-hipped hard-eyed cold-hearted piece of rough trade.

She plays it tight
to her knucklebones her line of hip to knee to dark-edged turn and knuckle under.

She is the only boy in a girl body west of Hudson never notices how the girls in boy bodies mock her moves hate her for what she doesn't value the girl body starved to boy.

what is the dream of flesh?

Never enough never good enough I fail to be what is most needed cannot even imagine a separate place for my own needs fears desires.

The dream of the flesh is enough of the spirit enough of the brain enough not too much not an unjust demand or a greedy one.
The flesh is hungry for just enough milk to the rim of the glass a kiss that rests fully on the mouth time that goes steadily does not run out screaming Come on. Come on!

Flesh on flesh sunlight on my eyelids I dream the dream of the body the muscles that long to loosen the belly's cry for justice bean soup and quiet for the eating a breath that rises easy to the mouth.

I will not give one for the other trade flesh for mind or memory.
The dream of flesh is integrity the body joined with its own ambitions honestly acknowledging the cunt as fully as the belly, honestly honoring the women who stir my flesh to dream.

boston, massachusetts

Boston, Massachusetts, many years ago a woman told me about a woman dead a woman who might not have been known to be a lesbian.

No one is sure they knew that.
The cops didn't say that, they said she was wearing a leather jacket, blue jeans, worn boots, had dark cropped hair and was new to the neighborhood, living in an old brick rowhouse with three other women.
Said she was carrying a can of gasoline.
They did not say why,
a car waiting,
a jar of sticky brushes.
Said she was white her friends were white the neighborhood was bad she and her friends were fools didn't belong there.
Were queer anyway.
Said the young rough crowd of men laughed a lot when they stopped her, that she laughed back,
and then they made her pour the gasoline over her head.

Later, some cop said she was a hell of a tough bitch
'cause she walked two blocks on her own feet, two blocks to the all-night grocery where another little crowd watched going

Shiiiiit!

Will you look at that?

Look at that!

I read about it in the paper—two paragraphs.
I have carried that story with me ever since wanting more, wanting no one to have to be those two stark paragraphs.

We become our deaths.
Our names disappear and our lovers leave town, heartbroken, crazy,
but we are the ones who die.
We are the forgotten burning in the streets hands out, screaming,

This is not all I am.

I had something else in mind to do.

Not on that street, always and only that when there was so much more she had to do.

Sometimes when I love my lover I taste in my mouth ashes gritty grainy

grating between the teeth the teeth of a woman unquestionably known
to be a lesbian.

little enough

On President Street a lady standing in her yard reminded me of every aunt I ever met, stiff-backed and tired but laughing in a rough loud voice.

"You ever see such ugly furniture?" Everything for sale: a chest, table, counter and chairs, bent lamps and broken cabinets. "But the way things are, if it stands still, I'd sell it." She laughed and I could not leave, for hope she'd laugh again.

"You girls out walking on such a pretty day, why don't you just buy me out and let me go in? You look at this stuff. This an't bad stuff.

Ugly but strong like they say, and clean, clean."

Which it was—scrubbed up and polished, oiled shiny in the sunlight, like that lady and her concrete yard.

"You girls," she smiled at us, invited us in to see her new kitchen, the furniture set aside, the walls redone. "I've lived here twenty years, worked forty for the city. You got to work, you know even when the body wants no part of it. You got to work." I know. I have always known. I smiled at her and memorized her address, watched the light at her temples, the tight hair lightening with age, her hands swinging a spray bottle of polish and a flat yellow cotton rag. I know. I know. I praised her walls, her cabinets, hugged to myself her forty years of stubborn work, survival.

The women I dream of loving take care of themselves, their people, put up shelves in the evening, boil off chicken stock before bed, sleep hard and are up again before dawn for the quiet, the hope of a few good lines, another little piece of a story.
Like her, that old woman on President Street, as sturdy as her pine cabinets and hand-scraped doors. "You girls," she said, and I knew then why she'd stopped us, what she'd seen in how my lover touched my neck, knew that none of us would say the word, say lesbian or even lovers.

We would talk instead of houses, kitchens, furniture, and how it is, making your own way in a world where nobody's handing out anything for free, of soup recipes and bean dishes rescued from burning pots.
"God an't gonna reach down and smooth things," she laughed.
"God's got enough on his mind." She waved her hand as if to say God's got little enough to do with us.
"But you can do it. Get yourself a piece of something important to you and work it, work it with time and effort and care." In the code we were speaking, I could not tell if she meant the house or life or love.

all those imaginary ladies

She asked me,

How many lovers have you had?

Isn't it strange how tacky that question makes me?

I promise you

I was not a pursuer, not a seducer.

I have always been surprised by passion and its death. But I made a mistake in the beginning told a lie that confused all that followed said,

You are not the first.

said,

I know what I'm doing.

It was so frightening to be the lesbian between us, to be that young and that certain with her looking back at me, just as scared.

One of us had to be experienced.

One of us had to be responsible.

So I reassured her invented women out of stories adventures, anecdotes to tease her while my fingers slipped up her hips in holy helpless passion and she she laughed relaxed and loved me.

Ah, but the lie,
that lie has followed me as if the women I spoke of trailed off in lines of flesh from my shaky fingers, trailed off and ran around telling their own stories of how I'd been and what we'd done.

All those imaginary ladies
told their own lies,
said,
You are not the first.
said,
Don't be afraid.
Let me tell you about the first her me Dorothy.

Somewhere, someone is lying.
is saying my name,
is laughing
is saying,

Shit, honey!
she pretended,
and I knew it
all the time.

whoring away my imagination

Mama wants me rich and famous.
An old lover keeps asking me when the hell am I going to write that bestseller anyway?
I shrug. She has read so much of my work, still never understands how the work has its own rhythm, its own needs, how sometimes I swear I'm transcribing, living my life around the work not through it.
That other lover, the one followed me all those weeks threatening to deliver me just the adventure I deserved, she's saved all my letters, stories, poems, plans on being famous shortly after me, which is almost as funny as the one who wanted me to pay her not to send the same stuff to my boss. So send it, I said.

Sitting down over work never seems to get finished, head nodding exhausted after eight hours of other people's typing, typing my own journal-poems, short stories, and those three novels never come to an end, I pick up speed going nowhere trying to hang onto the wider view my life the country
seen from the air.

i chose this ground

I chose this ground
New York City in the coldest decade a lifetime away from the cornbread warm milk hunger of my childhood.
I chose this ground
this lesbian city ripe with color and fear, violence and hope, languages, ambition and desire.
This ground rocking beneath my feet quicksand or shale slope gonna slip me into the river drown me, like I never chose this ground never fled the sucking mud of a ground no one could hold, women who lied to you, a region where I wasn't supposed to exist, where they say there are no black lesbians, no poor white southerners who resist being what everybody else thinks they are, no women who write to survive, for hope of a people set free, a city remade.
The ground swept clean.

Every Wednesday, every Sunday of her life my grandma swept her yard, raked the dust into smooth clean lines the red dust that choked babies and stained the boards of her porch.
She paid whatever rent was demanded for the right to rake her yard and when they put her out three years before she died, the uncles moved her to a yard where the rocks had never been cleared where glass and wire scraps threatened our feet. She ignored the boxes sitting full, went out to rake that ground to clear herself a sense of place.

“Hold your ground,” she told me.
I hold what I can be sure of—the ground I have chosen—
New York City in the coldest decade.

reason enough to love you

The night my mama called—a Thursday night—which meant, certainly, something was wrong, you took my hand, sitting there on the bed not interrupting while she told jokes and I laughed and I told jokes and she laughed, both of us trying to cry so soft, maybe the other one could pretend not to hear.
You took my hand and held on tight while my tears ran down your shoulder and mama told another joke in my left ear.
You didn't make me explain, just held me and took away some of the fear of dying.

The day they were shouting my name, everyone looking at me like I was crazy or had forgotten somehow to dress right like all those nightmares from my childhood you put your hand on my neck and squeezed stayed close to me stayed close and put your fear in another place.

And that morning when I woke up crying not able to say why, it could have been anything, any of ten good reasons to just lay back and cry, you slid over and put your whole body over mine gently, your hand in my hair, your mouth on my ear, wrapping silence and love and the muscles of your thighs all around me and let me cry let me cry like no one ever let me before.

the women who love me

She could not sleep.
I could not stay awake.
She hinted that if I did not I might wake up on the fire escape, naked, on the roof or sidewalk.

I nodded, nodded, nodded out.

The women who love me
hold me when I sleep, put their legs between mine.
Their fingers lace my cold ears.
They breathe on me, careful not to wake me too soon.

The women who love me have their own sisters to reconcile, brothers, family and Broadway winds.
The women whose hands never touch my own still reach me turning round to face their fear laughing at a hatred never meant to be understood.

They bank the ground I stand on every time they stand against the wind refuse to deny themselves, their people, bend but do not fall,
hold to time
and steady struggle, the reach of daylight,
the hope of women who love each other, women who truly love each other.

we make love

We make love
and its a game called Maybe you'll live long enough.

We make love
it's a game
it's a game called I know what you want but I'm not gonna give it.

We make love
we make love
it's a game
called Just what you deserve called Justice
called Despair.

It's a game
it's a game
called
The most vicious revenge or Reparations.

We make love
we make love
it's a game
it's a game

Even so I come.

the other side of the wall

The other side of the wall they are making love my mama croons a deep-throated bird under wet leaves, rides my stepfather's staggered engine roar.
My sisters' eyes are inches from my ears.
The wall is kitchen-curtain thin.
Hear them? Listen.
This is why she married him.
Underneath, it is always sex.

My sisters' eyes are bicycle wheels.
Their fingers are wet, hot, hard.
Listen to them. The pump of fingers, cock, and tongue.
Listen to my sisters breathing every night, lips to my ears, every night, after the bath and the shouting he takes her to bed, grounds her to the wall where our fingers press the mystery, the unseen clearly heard train of desire.

This side of the wall we are making love teeth, tongue, hands all entwined.
You ride hard the edge of my hip, swing me belly tight up to the flat of the wall.
I reach back, become a train gaining speed.
Just there I hear my sisters, breathing hard their fingers sliding, wide as their eyes.
Listen. Just listen to us.
I could, I swear to you, be my mama.
You do, I swear, fuck like a man.

Only a little harder, and I'll break through.
My fingers will claw a hole.
This wall will come down.
We'll reach my sisters' straining fingers.
My eyes will fly up like a bird clearing ground and that old grating mysterious engine will shudder, and pound, and lift us all clear.

"The women who hate me hate
their insistent desires, their fat lusts
swallowed and hidden, disciplined to nothing
narrowed to bone and dry hot dreams.
The women who hate me deny
hunger and appetite,
the cream delight
of a scream
that arches the thighs and fills
the mouth with singing."

JILL POSNER

Dorothy Allison's poetry is razor sharp, angry, and full of passion. She writes to exorcise her demons and is saved from bitterness by the women she loves.

Her collection of stories, Trash, received the 1989 Lambda Book Awards for Best Lesbian Fiction and Best Lesbian Small Press Book.

Firebrand
Books